The Grand Concert Hall

On October 2nd of 2004 in a small town called Soledar (Donetsk oblast) a symphony concert with the participation of the Donbass Symphony Orchestra under the guidance of the Austrian conductor Kurt Schmid and the People's artist Victoria Loukianetz was performed in a salt mine at a nearly 300m depth located in the Donetsk Region,

This concert became the first glaring event of the Art Festival, which poetically is referred to as "The Salt Symphony".

Symphony in Salt

The small place by the name Soledar, the area in which salt mines are arranged, is located in Donbass, a vigorous and potential industrial region in the Northeast of the Ukraine. The beginning of industrial salt production in this area goes back to some 100 years ago. Besides, there exist operating mines, where work is in full swing, whereas others have no output whatsoever. One of these closed mines continues to serve the public in its own way. That is to say those necessary facilities were given to create a speleological sanatorium, where diseases like bronchial asthma, allergies and others are successfully medically treated. A museum passes on the history of salt production on the territory of Donbass, at the same time as an underground orthodox so called salt church offers services and wedding ceremonies.

All things in the mine: walls, ceiling, floor and even trees are cut of salt. The most unique piece being the salt palm, a symbol of Donbass, an analogue of Mertsalov's palm. Here, there are also salt sculptures made by folk craftsmen. On December 2003 a record was hold by mine 41, which was fixed in the Guinness book of records for the first case of aeronautics in a balloon of the "hopper" type.
